KOBAYASHI MARU »

Tests. You hate, 'em, right?

Here at the alumni mother ship we have training exercises designed to test the character of our cadets. Let's take a look at how that plays out for Cowboy star pilots.

- We don't subscribe to no-win scenarios
- Redefining problems is what we do
- The Neutral Zone is somewhere we're unfamiliar with (we are fully engaged)
- Simulations are non-reality; we rescue routinely for real
- Klingons do present in our clinics
- Our devices are programmed to receive distress signals
- We deliver aid to distressed "vessels" at the risk of provocation and accept responsibility

Original thinking is what Starship Cowboys are trained to do to protect the frontier in the strange new world. To honor alumni creativity, from time to time I will recognize a creative email in the Friday Bit. Yep, these are part of my altered psyche. In a training exercise, I will incorporate periodic alumni emails in the Friday Bit. If the email is yours and you respond to me, a Friday Bit interstellar prize is yours.
