

Communicating Science Workshop

Four CVHS faculty members recently participated in a two day workshop conducted by the Alan Alda Center for Communicating Science.

Drs. Andrew Hanzlicek, Veterinary Clinical Sciences, Susan Little, Tim Snider, both with Veterinary Pathobiology, and Madhan Subramanian, Physiological Sciences, were part of 32 campus-wide faculty selected to participate in the program.

The workshop is designed to help researchers learn to communicate more effectively with people outside their field including the general public, policy makers, the media, students, potential employers or funders, and prospective collaborators in other disciplines.

The facilitators are communications experts with some having experiences in television journalism and acting. These instructors are provided by Alda Communication Training (ACT), which works in partnership with the Alan Alda Center for Communicating Sciences, at SUNY's Stony Brook University campus.

Congratulations, Dr. Ranjan!

Ashish Ranjan, BVSc, PhD, associate professor and Kerr Chair in the Department of Physiological Sciences, received the 2018 President's Fellows Faculty Research Award. This one-time award will help Ranjan investigate an innovative cancer treatment technology. Read more at President's Fellows Award for Cancer Research.
